Contentment in the Household.

The woman who starts cut to be a modest housekeeper, in the true exemplification of the term, will be healthy. The trouble, however, is that what is commonly understood to be "a model housekeeper" is far removed from the ideal. She of the ultra, extremely conscientious type, is generally successful only at the expense of health; moreover, the sacrifice is perfectly needless, and, indeed, defeats the very end for which it is made. Not only can housekeeping be well done and health retained, but, in order to do it well, health is an absolute assential. In the opinion of these marryrs to mistaken notions, the washing, ironing and scrubbing must be done at any cost on the appointed days; mending the instant following that on which the rent occurs; and, in sickness and in health, a routine as inexorable as the laws of the Medes and Persians must be observed. Emergencies must be met without interfering with this clock-work routine. Evenings when they ought to be at some entertainment, or at least engaged in relaxing conversation with their bushands, they, as likely as not, speed in the kitchen washing china, or upstairs sewing buttons on the children's clothes. out and take a stroll in the open air. Then, to "fill in the chinks with," there is always sewing done in a hot, close room, from which is carefully excluded all fresh air, the lack of which constantly exasperates them without their knowing what the trouble is, and further enables the similarly exasperated children to add to their discomfort. They are afraid to open the windows in cold weather, whereas it would be much better if they would throw them wide open once or twice every afternoon, moving with the children for that length of time into another room. Instead of ambitiously and foolishly undertaking to do all the sewing themselves, it would be in every sense economical to do only the plain sewing and to hire the rest done. The hustants of such housekeepers would generally be glad to have them relieved to some of their cares, but often they do

Innecest Courage.

A correspondent writes that she once heard of a child who was found by its mother stroking and playing with a live rattlesmake. "Pitty worm! with a live rattlesmake "Pitty worm! with a live rattlesmake. "Pitty worm!" With its expressible horror the mother realized her strik's danger, and for a moment was powerless and speechless.

If the reptile were disturbed or angered, her boy's peril would be doubly great. She checked her first impulse to run and seize him, and called, quietly, "" so, don't disturb the pretty worm, but coase and get a lump of sugar to feed it with."

The child stole softly away from the smake, and ran to his mother unlarmed. She smalched him up and carried him to a place of safety: then she seized a club that lay hear, and dispatched the smake. Is had six rattles.

At the moment the little fellow opened his eyes the grizzly was nosing about his head. He started up and slapped it in the face.

The animal good-maturedly retreated, perhaps amused by the innocent bravado of the little man, whom it could have crushed with a blow of its hinge paw. The bear trotted off toward the fence, closely followed by the lad.

"You get out o' bere! You get out!" shouled the lad.

His mother's attention was at that shouted the lad.

His mother's attention was at that instant attracted to the scene. Her borror may be imagined. As the bear was squeezing through the fence the boy raised his foot and dismissed him with a kick.
